The 10-year-old Greater Rochester Diversity Council plans to expand its reach to include businesses and organizations nationwide.

Now the Workforce Diversity Network, the non-profit's first non-Rochester branch is being formed in Atlanta.

"The decision to form this new national organization was fueled by our success in presenting some of the nation's largest-attended conferences on work force diversity and by a growing number of requests from businesses in other parts of the country to join our organization," said Michael Streeter, executive director, in a statement.

The organization works to educate the public of the importance of developing and managing diversity in the workplace. The group has some 50 members, including corporations, small and midsize businesses, educational institutions, health care providers and non-profit organizations.
